CORRESP NDENCE.

GUBERNATORIAL VALEDICTORY ORATORY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "DAILY PRESS" SIR,-The reference in H.E. Governor Blake's speech, delivered just before his departure, at the City Hall, to a scheme for connecting Hongkong to Canton by rail reminds me that it is not the first time a departing Governor has, so to speak, taken the public into his confidence, giving little private advice which it will be impossible for them in any way to use.

The last and only occasion in which I heard a departing Governor "let himself go" wasata dinner given to Sir Arthur Kennedy, when he made revelations regarding the sanitary, or rather insanitary state, of the Colony, with solemn warnings of what was likely to occur if matters were not promptly remedied. These caused at the time much surprise and misgivings among the community, who however, were helpless five years, under Sir John Pope Hennessy, as Governor, records.

You will find the report of Sir Arthur Kennedy's speech in the Daily Press of March 3, 1877, but this does not record fully all he said regarding the condition we were drifting into, and the risks the Colony took in allowing things sanitary to go on from bad to worse,—yours, &c.

THE JOCKEY CLUB AND FAIR PLAY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "DAILY PRESS."

Hongkong, 27th November. Sin,-In every British community there is no doubt that sport generally holds a place second only to business, and one finds that sportsmen--not sporting mon-are usually gentlemen, and that they "play the game." Until quite recently Hongkong might reason ably feel proud of the part she has taken in connection with the Sport of Kings; now, alas! she too has fallen from her high estate. It is an open secret that a dead set has been made against oneof the stewards of the Jockey Club . by some of his fellow members who do not scruple to use some of the meanest methods of venting their spleen upon him. This is a man who has been riding and crossing ponies in the East for some twenty-two years, served on the English Association Football Committee-a colleague of such men as Major Marindia and to permit of his securiog the evide Lord Kinnaird, and has acted as Clerk of the chief officer. On the case being called on in

'I here is paid to the Governrace-course—a dollar a year or thereabouts, and surely direct or indirect payers of taxes have a moral if not an absolute right to be members of the Jockey Club, always providing that they are gentlemen and duly vouched for by two members of the club.

A strong feeling of indignation is abroad: and if at the next election of stewards the members of the club do not show their appreciation of such work as being inimical to the best interests of racing, sport will suffer, and it the Championship class to-day contest their will be said with truth, that this is not such a | third race towards this season's championship. very British Colony after all.-I am, Sir, The one-designers and second class race on yours, &c.,

THE BRITISH CONSULAR SERVICE.

The Graphic, commenting upon the British Consular Service, says :- It is still too much the habit of some British diplomatists to look upon commerce, commercial matters and commercial representatives as subjects and persons to be treated with more or less contempt. They don't seem to perceive that commerce is now a much more important item than it was when diplomacy was the amusement Sovereigns, who made war to attain personal advantages or to gratify personal ambitions. The circumstances have almost entirely changed, but the attitude of all our diplomatists has not changed with them. The average consultist still regarded by many of them as a person of not much importance, who is to be treated as an inferior. That cannot continue for long now. If we are to have a commercial war, our diplomatists and consuls will have to fight at the blew the score was:-110th Mahrattas, the front; they must be men who understand H.K.H.C., 0. The approach of December (of which the) coldness of yesterday made us almost painfully aware) begins to make footballers think of the Shield ties. Entries for the co upetition close on the 12th prex, and by the end of the month i first round play should be commencing. An important alteration has been made in the rules of the competition. In response to the request of the Sherwood Foresters, that regiment and the Royal Artillery will be permitted to enter one or more teams instead of company elevens as before. This is a concession which should greatly increase the chances of a arrangements. military side winning the trophy. The Sherwoods last year did not show up very prominently in the competition, but there is some good material, and, not being restricted to company teams, they should be able to get together a good XI. or two. It is to be noted that the new regiment do not by any means play the rather violent game of their predecessors, the Welsh Fusiliers. From what I have seen of them, their game is a strictly fair one. Some of the Fusiliers, it may be remembered, were inclined to distinctly rough play.

Only one buckey match of any importance took place during the past week, the Amphitrite team beating the Club by 3 goals to 2. The Club was unlucky to lose, as one or two casy chances of scoring were offered but not taken. Still, of course, g. od and prompt shooting is the mark of a successful team. Every Woman Desires to Know

About Sanative Antiseptic Cleansing

And about the Care of the Skin, Scalp, Hair and Hands.

Too much stress cannot be placed on the great value of Cuticura Soap, Ointment and Resolvent in the antiseptic cleansing of the mucous surfaces and of the blood and circulating fluids, thus affording pure, sweet and economical local and constitutional treatment for weakening ulcerations, inflammations, itchings, irritations, relaxations, displacements, pains and irregularities peculiar to females. Hence the Cuticura remedies have a wonderful influence in restoring health, strength and beauty to weary women, who have been prematurely aged and invalided by these distressing ailments, as well as such sympathetic afflictions as anomia, chlorosis, hysteria, nervousness and debility.

Women from the very first have fully appreciated the purity and sweetness, the power to afford immediate relief. the certainty of speedy and permanent cure, the absolute safety and great economy which have made the Cutleura remedles the standard skin cures and humour remedies of the civilized world. Millions of women use Cuticura Soap, assisted by Cuticura Ointment, for preserving, purifying and beautifying the skin, for cleansing the scalp of crusts, scales and dandruff, and the stopping of falling hair, for softening, whitening an i southing red, rough and sore hands, for annoying irritations, and elegrative weaknesses, and for many sanative, antiseptle purposes which readily suggest themselves, as well as for all the purposes of the toilet, bath and nursery. CHAPTER XXVI.

BALVATION. A week or so later every debt which Lady Bettrell had incurred in her almost frantic efforts to free herself from the hands of the vagabond who for months had held her fast in them, was paid.

To, it may almost be said, the disgust of the gentleman who honoured Van Vleet by consouting to be her bu-band and to live upon her, the £5,000 bill (for which Lady Bottrell had received £3,750) was paid, and Mr. Rutland almost swore at having to accept the payment. For, ample as was £1,250 for the loan of £3,750 for not quite three mon he, this remuneration was very far short of what he had hoped that loan would produce as time went on, and one. more of their aristocratic custom-rs b came more deeply enmasked in his net.

But, if this undesirable repayment caused that gentleman so much grief and mortification it was only a little of the suffering which he. experienced a day or two afterwards when, on returning home, his wife said, as she removed the eighrette from her mouth:

"There is more trouble about cette chire Lady Bottrell now, Valter. She-" "-has not paid her bill" Mr. Rutland ex-Directors, together with Statement of Accounts | claimed, while his generally rosy complexion turned almost white. "Don't say that, dear, only that I kept this secret from you; that-> not owe us a sou. Ah, mon Dieu!" who was philosophio if nothing else, said. "I suppose she does not mean to remove her cust m P "No, she said nothing about that. But, my dour, she said that she was not well -that-ah grand Dieu-that now ze 'Onourable Mees Maud was so soon to be married she should go little into the world again. She was getting old, she said - mon Dieu! she is five years younger than I and looks ten -she should not go out much now."

"I w nder where she got the money from It's a good deal to borrow." "From her husband, I suppose. I hope so. Ah ! well, Valter, we must make zo best of a bad bargaio." "A bad bargain!" That was the light in which the fas ionable court dressmaker considered the payment of her bill and the loan from the "ald respectable solicitor," and a bad bargain she probably considers it to be to this yery day.

Meanwhile, not a week after Lady Bottrell and behaved in such an inconsiderate manner to Madame Van Vleet and her aristocratic husband, there ran a rumour through society that her ladyship had been taken suddenly and alarmingly isl Ill with, as the fashionable phyaician, who was called in was reported to have said, a terrible crisis, or attack, of the nerves; so ill that, if her pulse could not be lowered and some tranquility obtained, he could not answer for the consequences.

"Has she anything on hermind?" he asked of Séverine, who was established as nurse over her mistress and never left her side day and night, while refusing to allow anyone eise to share her watching. "If she has any serious trouble, some trouble that was also a secret one, and I knew it were so, it would go far to help me in restoring her

"Yes, Sir Charles," Séverine rep ied, looking up at the grave, kindly doctor, "she has a serious trouble and a secret one. A trouble that for some years I alone knew of, but that, of late, has also been known to her cousin, Mr. Chantrey." "And her husband? Lord Bottrell! Is it a secret which he cannot know? Surely not, the physician said, looking down into the troubled eyes of the woman who, he had already learnt, had been Lady Bottrell's nurse and companion since she was born. "Oh, no, no! not in the way you mean, Sir Charles. It was, it is, in truth, a secret which should have been revealed to his lordship, long, long ago; before even he and my lady were married But it was not told and then—then trouble and sorrow came, and it has never been told at all." "Lady Bottrell should tell his lordship now, since-well!-it will bear telling." "So her consin, Mr. Chantrey, saye."

"And you," Sir Charles said, looking at the grey haired, well-spoken woman, "you who have been her companion all her life? You! What do you say?"

"I say so, too," Séverine said, gazing honestly, openly, into the physician's eyes. "I say so too; I am as much to blame as she and though it may part us for ever and Lord Bottrell may turn me out of his house, even after I have been with her for almost forty years. But, still, I say she should tell her husband."

" Make her do so. If it is what he may hear and, in hearing, will still beable to forgive what she discloses as well as the keeping it secret for years, it will not part him and her, or her and you. And the telling it will most probably bring about her recovery."

That evening Sir Geoffrey came to his wife's room as he had done every night since she was taken ill, and, after first asking Severine how she was and then speaking kindly and hopefully to Lady Bottrell, he prepared to leave her. But, as he turned away after kissing her on the forehead, and after arranging her pillows as he thought more comfortably, he heard her say

"Geoffrey, I want to speak to you. Come back to me. Come-I-I-"My darling." Lord Bottrell said, turning back towards the bed and sitting down in the chair by the side of it, while he took his wife's hand and hold it in his. "What is it? Andand -you should not distress yourself by talking. It is not good for you."

"Ao. He was dead before our marriage. We are man and wife, we have always been man and wife,"

"Yes, thank God, My wrong to you was that I had loved another man before you; "Every centime. Every one. Valter, she does that I had married him. And-and-liston, Geoffrey. That man and I parted at the door "It might be worse, anyhow," the gentleman. of the Registry Office where the marriage took place. We parted with the understanding that, nutil we could proclaim our marriage. until he could provide a home, we would never acknowledge our marriage, never be more to each other than ordinary acquaintances, though with, in our hearts, the satisfaction of knowing that we were man and wife. And theu-almost at once—this man was disgraced, exposed, turned out of the army and of all decent society. And he wont away and was drowned at sea. And I thought I could marry then, though I dreaded to tell you and, above all, to let my father know what I had done, and so I kept the secret and married you. God knows how that secret has weighed on my whole life, how, when I heard through another secondrel that my first husband was alive. I endeavoured to take my life-"

" Alive! ho was alive! "No. He was truly dead. But, Geoffrey, this second vagabond was imposing on me, robbing me, blackmailing me. And-and-1 was driven to desperation-I-ah! Geoffrey," and she put her hand beneath the pillow and drew out a long foolscap envelope full of sheets of writing paper, "take this paper, go into my boudoir and read it, and you will know all. Also you will know how I have suffered for my fault-what I have suffered. And-i-youcan, forgive me. Come back when you have read it if you can do so. If you do not come back tonight I shall know that my wickedness to you is beyond pardon.

Silently Lord Bottrell rose from the chair by his wife's bedside, and took the envelope from her hand, and then, with one glance at her, went slowly out of the room.

And she, distrought, eager, full of fears and sometimes hopes-for there had been no sign of anger on her husband's face as he went forth, but only a look of intense sorrow- lay there weiting-waiting!-for his return. Counti g the quarters as they chimed from the little silver clock on the mantelpiece the first quarter-nother and another. Then, as the reverberation of the third quarter ceased to ring through the room, she heard the handle of the door turn as Lord Bottrell came in and advanced to the budside.

He advanced, and then stooping over his wife, kissed her long and tenderly while muttering a moment afterwards, "My poor darling. My poor Rhods. How you must have suffered all these years. How awful your sufferings must have been during the last six months."

"And you can forgive me? Forgive me for all my long deceit of you; for never telling

"I can forgive you all but one thing!"

"One thing | What ? "That you did not let me share these last months of torture with you. That you did not let me have my full portion, my full right, of sharing your last months of agony. The agony of the only woman I ever loved! the only woman I shall ever love.'

And again Lord Bottrell stooped over and kissed his wife.

It seemed evident that the safe passing at that distance depended upon the stern light of the cruiser broadening by reason of her going over to starboard. It had been difficult to arrive at what precise distance separated the two courses at 11.38.—the course the cruiser had travelled over and the course the Empress about to travel over. If the broadening was due to overhauling and not to the cruiser changing her course it was clear that the courses would converge. It had been shown that at 11.35 the two courses were separated by 250 yards, and counsel said that the distance was very short. It had been shown by the evidence of the position of the lights on the overhauling steamer that she was almost dead-astern. No reason had been adduced by the other side wby the cruiser should alter her course at this time. She was making for Hongkong and was on the in the course of the discussion of the proper course, as she intended to pass outside Podro Blunco. It was known that the course of the Empress was altered a little later. The plaintiffs alleged that instead of taking bearings by the compass they seemed to have relied France, England, and Italy. Counsel then reviewed the evidence as to the time of the orders to starboard, etc., given on the Empress, and continued that when the orders were given the ships had got, into such close proximity that they did not affect what subsequently happened. The captain of the Empress had stat d that he could not have perter and gone close; for the same reason he could out slacken, as the craiser would then have been cut in two. THE COTTON INDUSTRY IN

An article in the Novoe Vremya by a wellknown economist, Mr. A. Gurlef, argues in favour of the development of a flax industry in Central Russis, and against the Government spending more money on the cotton industry in .Turkestan. The following paragraphs may be

CENTRAL ASIA.

You are demanding at the present time fresh sacrifices for the development of the Turkestan cotton industry. In order to supply all the demand for cotton, it will be necessary to spend about seventy million roubles from the tax resources of the Empire on the irrigation of Turkestau, and on the threshold of this new self-sacrifice it is not out of place to consider what was the former position of these districts that have been so dandled and cherished by us. Until the birth of the 'cotton policy,' Turkestan was literally a country of beggars. but we set ourselves to pamper it, and in some ton years Turkestan from being, on the testimony of local chiefs, an insignificant country in respect of her economic relations, was rapidly converted to one of the most valuable portions of the State territory. The cultivated areas of Turkestan rapidly grew; in ten years they had doubled; the income of the districts exceeded 100 million roubles, whilst the commercial turn-over of the towns was calculated at ten million roubles Now, how had this prosperity been brought about, and by what was it supported? It was produced by cotton and supported by astounding financial privileges. At this time we paid the population of Turkestan about 400 million roubles for cotton exported thence. In twenty years this tribute equalled the famous five milliards | aid France as war contribution. Notwithstanding this enormous influx of wealth, Turkestan not only did not begin to make good the snorifices borne by Rusia for her economic de elopment, but up till now has demanded supplementary disburseunder the cruiser's stern, as the ships were too ments in the budget of the latter's current Seoul administration. The deficits of Turkestan, exclusive of the expenditure of conquest, exceeded 160 million roubles, which were paid from the general resources of the Empire. From the Crown revenues collected in Turkestan not one copack entered the State treasury to cover | Hanci the State debt, &c. All that was received was spent on the spot, and additional payments were demanded from the general resources of the Manila country, constituting, as it were, a premium in farour of the native population of sixty copecks

The Information in these Descriptions, consisting of a hundred interesting articles, packed with facts concisely set out, and containing statistics of the TRADE of each Country and Port, would alone suffice to fill a large volume.
